LANGUAGE AND INTERNATIONAL STUDIES, ENGLISH:

GAIN STRONG COMPETENCIES IN INTERNATIONAL POLITICS, CULTURE AND ENGLISH LANGUAGE

Functioning in a global job market requires knowledge about international politics, history, culture, and English language. It also requires intercultural understanding and the ability to take an ethical stance. You achieve these skills with the bachelor's degree programme in Language and International Studies, English (LISE), at Aalborg University (AAU).

The LISE programme prepares you to work with a range of international and global issues, and gives you the opportunity to work in English throughout all semesters of the programme. The programme combines study in areas of international politics, international organisations and intercultural communication with advanced English skills, giving you the skills to perform a wide range of job functions nationally and internationally in public and private organisations.

LISE prepares you to continue your education within a number of master's programmes at AAU, across Europe and Scandinavia or elsewhere around the world. LISE students apply to programmes focusing on international relations and politics as well as programmes focusing on international culture and communication.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR FURTHER STUDIES

Students choosing to take their master's at Aalborg University typically continue their studies in Culture, Communication and Globalization, the Masters in International Relations or Tourism. Many also take their master's degree at universities throughout Europe and beyond. LISE students have studied everything from international law to global humanitarian issues.

JOB AND CAREER: LISE prepares you for internationally-oriented career paths

LISE provides a solid foundation for a number of internationally oriented career paths. These include public institutions (e.g., ministries or municipalities), humanitarian and development organisations and political or cultural analysis or communications work with private companies. The study features study abroad and AAU master's programmes include an internship semester. This helps you connect with the type of organisation you would like to work within.

FROM MAHMOUD RAFAI, LISE GRADUATE 2018

"The Language and International Studies, English bachelor's program endowed me with a comprehension of international affairs and contemporary global history, laying the foundation for my career. Its comprehensive curriculum provided insight into international relations, conflict, social affairs, and intercultural communication. LISE's broad overview prepared me to navigate our ever-evolving world with discernment. Since graduating from LISE, I have worked in the Danish foreign service on diplomatic missions to the UAE and Saudi Arabia and now hold the position of Head of Section in the Danish Immigration Service besides serving as board member of the Danish Foreign Policy Society U35. I recommend the program to students with aspirations of working in international affairs."

Application Deadlines: March 15, international students; July 5, general application.
